

Aquariums Fish Tanks for Fish Keeping

Contributed by admin
Monday, 11 June 2007

The key to fish keeping is having the right aquariums fish tanks. Otherwise, you cannot create an ecosystem in which marine life can survive. The aquariums fish tanks come in varied shape and sizes. The most common designs initially were box shaped and glass bowl shaped. Even today these are popular among beginners.

However, most aquarium stores today offer much trendier aquariums fish tanks. These are made of acrylic and can be pentagon, octagon or hexagon shaped. Tower aquariums are also very popular because they can be easily accommodated in offices and homes where space is a constraint.

The other popular choices are the coffee table aquariums fish tanks and the bar table aquariums fish tanks. These aquariums are usually triangular or hexagonal in shape. A slab is placed on top of the aquarium that works like the table. The fish tanks have transparent gravel which is lit in a blue tone. This adds to the beauty and the sophistication of the aquarium.

Glass and acrylic are the two materials that are commonly used today to construct aquariums fish tanks. Each material has its own pro and cons. Glass is sturdy and is much cheaper to use when compared with acrylic. However, a major disadvantage with glass is that it is very heavy and cannot be molded into trendy designs with ease. Acrylic on the other hand is light weight and easier to ship. Both are scratch resistant. It really depends upon the individual to choose whether he would go in for a glass tank or an acrylic fish tank. Users who want custom-designed aquariums fish tanks have no option but to settle for tanks made of acrylic.

You can liven up your aquariums fish tanks by adding aquatic plants, electric lights and corals. Corals especially help maintain the ecological balance and add color to the aquarium. Aquatic plants like Vallisneria or the umbrella plants too add to the stability of the ecosystem.{mosgoogle left}